LOVING EACH OTHER FROM A SOCIAL DISTANCE

So, I must admit, there are a few things that I have liked about the shut down and distancing that has come with the pandemic. A lot of shops have made things more streamlined so you get in out more quickly. More restaurants are offering to-go food and delivery than ever before. When we took our child to the doctor the other day for a wellness visit, we did not have to wait in a waiting room with a bunch of sick kids. We were able to wait in our car until a room was ready.

Even before all this, our society was getting more convenient, but also more isolated. We no longer have to go to department stores; we can just order what you want online. With the self-checkout line, we don't even have to talk to the cashier at the grocery store. All these things are designed to make our lives easier and safer during a pandemic, but they are also taking away our interaction with one other.

With the pandemic a lot of us have had to treat church the same way. We either try and slip in out with talking to as few people as possible, watch online, or many have just stopped attending all together. While isolating ourselves might be a good idea, especially for those at high risk, we need make sure this does not become a habit that continues beyond the pandemic. There might be many things that many of us find appealing about this new lifestyle, but it is not the lifestyle we are called to live as Christians. One of the greatest commands we are given is to love one another. How can we do that if we refuse to even interact with one another? How can our good works be a light to the world if we refuse to let the world see them? One of our purposes for gathering together on Sunday morning is so we may encourage each other, but how can we do that if don't even talk with each other?

Even though it may have been necessary this last few months we need to make sure we do not pick up new bad habits. We need to make sure we are sharing our lives together with those inside and outside the church. So as the risk of getting out continues to drop, start reaching out. Start talking to people at the grocery store. Don't worry about slipping out of church so quickly. Make an effort to love one another and to let our lives be a light to those we meet.
