“TEACH YOUR CHILDREN WELL . . .”

These are the words of a well-known song recorded in 1969 and though I am sure the writer did not have spiritual things in mind, the principle is one that carries over into many aspects of life. What does it mean to parents, that we “teach our children well?” What does it mean to teachers, that we “teach our children well?” What does it mean to the Church, that we “teach our children well?”

Teaching must of course, begin at home. It is in the home that children learn principles, patterns and values that will accompany them throughout their lives. What they hear from their parents and what they see in their parents will form the foundation upon which all other teaching, training and guiding is built. Yes, that is a great responsibility and yes, it is one that cannot be taken lightly!

What will our children learn about God from us as parents? What will they learn about Christ and his church? What will they learn about living in this world, about dealing with sin, about forgiveness and grace? What will we teach our children about loving their families, and loving their fellow human beings?

I read this quote last week: “If we don’t teach our children who God is, someone else will teach them everything he isn’t.” Those are chilling words, given the life-long and eternal implications they could have.

Our Bible class teachers also carry a great responsibility to open the doors and windows of scripture to young minds. What a blessing it is to have men and women dedicated to sharing the Bible story with our children! Please keep our parents and our teachers in your prayers, as they share in this great task!

Let’s continue to be committed to “teaching our children well!”
