MEET THE NEED

Mercy defined the Savior's life and mission. From lepers to sinners, he had compassion on those in need—even when they didn't know their need. In his mercy, he offered health and life and taught his disciples to do the same: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall receive mercy" (Mat. 5:7).

Mercy? The Roman philosophy of "no quarter" led to cruel measures to keep order in occupied Palestine. The Jewish leaders didn't know mercy. Instead, they were proud, egotistical, and self-righteous, demanding perfection. They punished people who opposed their tyranny or questioned their power.

Nowhere was this clearer than in their treatment of Jesus. Jesus went about doing good and showed compassion. He touched the untouchable, gave hope to the hopeless, opened the ears of the deaf, and gave sight to the blind. Jesus received those discarded by polite society and forgave the sins of the most hated. He was the perfect example of mercy and compassion, and in return the Jews crucified him.

So, when Jesus told his disciples to be merciful, there was very little example of mercy in their environment to emulate. But they had one shining example in Jesus.

We can also learn mercy by watching Jesus minister to the needs of others. The poor, the hurting, the lonely, and the proud all need us. Mercy isn't pity for pathetic people. Mercy is the action moved by pity. Feeling sorry for someone and wishing them peace is useless (Jas. 2:15-16). Our mercy must be living and active.

Mercy sees a hungry man and feeds him. Mercy sees a lonely woman and befriends her. Mercy sees a naked man and clothes him. Mercy sees one begging for love and loves her. Mercy meets the need, not just feels it.

The second part of Jesus' promise doesn't mean that as people see our compassion, they will return that compassion. It certainly didn't work that way for Jesus. Rather, he means as we show mercy, we will receive mercy from God. He is our benefactor. The mercy we show on earth will affect our merciful entrance into heaven.

Look around for compassion. There are some pockets of mercy, but mostly, mercy is absent. Self-care, self-interest, and self-focus banish it. Many people are too busy to see the needs all around them. Others embrace violence and abuse or are shrouded by greed and blinded to their neighbors' needs. Like the first century, the mercy we Christians show today may be the only true mercy our modern world ever witnesses.

Determine today to meet the needs of someone else.
